

Abstract:

Diffusion in not homogeneous media can be described both by the Fick and the Fokker-Planck diffusion equation. Should one of the two be considered the correct way to describe diffusion in not homogeneous systems? Using a microscopic approach, we show that both the description are reasonable and that they correspond to different implementation of spatial inhomogeneities.